

Dad was upset. "I can't find my glasses," he said. "I think I left them in their black case. Has anyone seen the black case? Does anyone know where I put them? I have a hard time reading without them."

"Oh no, not again," said Nate, Kate, and Beth. "You lost your glasses at work last week. We haven't seen them, but we'll help you look for them."

First Kate looked under all the beds. All she found was lots of dust and a blue fuzzy slipper.

Nate didn't find the glasses either. Instead, he found his white toy car and blue toy jeep in a box next to the stairs. "Good," he said. "I've been searching for these cars. I thought I left them at school after show and tell on Friday."

Beth found a cooking magazine in their toy chest. She also found some old, sticky candy from her birthday party.

While looking for the glasses, the children found lots of things. Behind their desk, Beth, Kate, and Nate found some paper clips. Kate found her new pink bracelet. Nate found a letter from his pen pal, Rick. Beth found a glob of old, hard glue. The kids discovered some cards and brought them to their mom. The children also found some missing socks, a purple stuffed animal puppy, some sticks of gum, rubber bands, and three markers. But there was no sign of the glasses.

Suddenly Dad yelled, "I found them! I found my glasses. They were in my coat pocket, just where I left them yesterday!"
